

Comparing the book and the film Goodnight Mister Tom

	Characters	Setting	In my opinion...
Book 	In the opening of the book you meet a young boy called William and a lady who was the Billeting officer for that location. Later on you come across an older man called Tom, who is to be the host parent of young William.	The setting in the book is at the doorstep of Mr Tom Oakley's tiny cottage, in the countryside.	In my opinion the opening of the book is more descriptive especially about the character; Mr Oakley and William.
Film 	In the opening of the film, you see little girls and boys carrying their belongings in a brown paper bag. After sometime, you meet a particularly small boy called William.	However in the opening of the film, you see multiple children on the train just arriving at the countryside.	Personally, I prefer the book because I had a vision of little William in my head, were as in the film he wasn't as I expected.
